In-group drumming each participant has a part to play, a personal rhythm. All these interdependent parts come together to create the complete group rhythm. Drumming in the corporate environment is shown to reduce stress; improve company morale; create better bonding and enhance cooperation between workers; improve communication and increase productivity.

A drum circle is a team activity where in each person contributes their own unique musical ideas and all participants' work together toward a shared goal and vision. Transformation in corporate communities occurs when people understand, respect and celebrate each other's differences. By understanding what motivates us and how we interact with others, we find greater significance in who we are, and value in what we do, resulting in greater productivity in the workplace and a better understanding of our co-workers.
